Top Gun trains to fight MiG's

PAO Office

NAVAL AIR FACILITY, KEY WEST, Fla.- An enemy Mig-29 has just passed through the cross hairs of a Navy F/A-18 Hornet and now the fight is on. Both pilots bank and turn to battle it out for victory in combat and ultimately air superiority.

This scenario is very much a reality in today's trouble spots around the world. To help give Navy and Air Force aviators an edge, the German Air Force has provided a real-world threat platform, formidable pilots, and the MiG-29 Fulcrum.

AGILE ARCHER O2 is an air combat training exercise hosted by the 125th Fighter Wing of the Florida Air National Guard at Naval Air Station Key West, Fla. that brings together the German Air Force and instructors from the Navy's Fighter Weapons School (Top Gun), located at the Naval Strike and Air Warfare Center (NSAWC) in Fallon, Nv.

This training provides an excellent opportunity for Navy F/A-18 pilots and Air Force F-15 pilots to train against the most probable and capable adversary either will face. It is a month long exercise running until October 7, 2002.

According to Navy Cmdr. Nicholas Mongillo, Top Gun's readiness officer, AGILE ARCHER O2 required extensive planning and coordination with the Florida Air National Guard and the German Air Force.

"It is a culmination of a year and a half of planning between the Air Force and Navy to bring together this type of training," said Mongillo.

AGILE ARCHER O2 exposes Navy and Air Force aircrew to simulated air combat against the MiG-29 Fulcrum, which is the most likely aircraft that they will face in combat.

The types of missions flown in this exercise are one versus one,

First Responders:

The difference between life and death

By JO2 Luke D. Johnson

Time is a precious commodity when dealing with a life or death situation. First responders must be able to deal with the stress of a chaotic situation, such as a combat zone or an accident scene, and they must also be able to provide the best medical treatment to their patient in the field.

A well-trained first responder can mean the difference between life and death for their patients. HM2 John Cobb, an NSAWC Navy corpsman, makes sure that first responders are the best trained around.

Cobb is responsible for training air wing helicopter crewmen who have very little emergency medicine familiarity, and he also conducts a emergency medical technician (EMT) course on base to teach base personnel in emergency care procedures. "We do real life scenarios and we teach them how to do patient assessment," says Cobb.

The purpose of training helicopter aircrew is to better prepare them to give a higher level of medical care to a downed pilot.

The EMT course that Cobb teaches on base is open to anyone that can attend the month

Chaplain Chat

By Fr Tom Friedl

Surveys indicate that well over 80% of Americans believe in God – which they automatically equate with spirituality and sound moral values. It seems to me that although Americans consider themselves “spiritual” there is something quite lacking in the formation of “family” values. Is the formation of values done by osmosis? By popular opinion? By putting it on a referendum for a vote?

I'll give you an example. Driving around town there are numerous signs encouraging voters to say “yes” to proposition 2. This is the referendum that will change Nevada's legal definition of marriage. The campaign behind this referendum tosses around the words “sanctity of marriage,” the “protection of family values,” the “protection of our nation,” etc. The language and the rhetoric sound so noble. Many couch their language under the guise of “religious values,” as if that makes everything all right.

The reason I question this is not because I don't believe that marriage ought to be only between a man and woman, but because of the bigger picture I look at. In my business of counseling people for marriage and who are also struggling with their marriage, I ask myself how this referendum will make any difference. (Remember, Nevada is a place where a man and a woman, who have known each other all of 5 minutes, can get married in the local “Chapel of Luv” by a “minister” dressed to look like Elvis and then get divorced two weeks later.) I am more concerned with finding ways to help a man and a woman sustain a life-long commitment than in a legal definition of marriage. [One cannot legislate morality.] I am more interested in finding ways to help a man and a woman build a where one fighter jet takes on another fighter jet, and also the Navy, Air Force, and MiG-29's perform basic fighter maneuvers, which is close in dog fighting.

During air warfare training exercises, the Navy and Air Force can simulate the MiG-29 by either the F/A-18 Hornet, F-14 Tomcat, or F-15 Eagle.

“We actually have a chance now to go up against a MiG-29, and we can examine its flight characteristics, flight controls, weapons systems, sensors, visual signatures. We can look across a circle at it and see how it looks, instead of looking at an American fighter simulating it,” stated Mongillo.

It is one thing to actually read about the capabilities of the MiG-29, however training against the real thing gives aircrew a real sense of what it is like actually flying against the MiG-29. It gives aircrew an opportunity to measure for themselves the capabilities of the threat aircraft, said Mongillo.

The German MiG-29 pilots are the most proficient and capable MiG-29 pilots in the world giving Navy and Air Force aircrews an opportunity to fly against a more experienced threat than they will most likely face in the combat arena, stated Mongillo.

The German JG-73 “Steinhoff” MiG-29 squadron has been flying for more than 10 years. The squadron was activated after Germany's reunification, and the squadron was tasked in the air defense role. Most of the pilots flying the MiG's were trained in the United States.

According to Mongillo, the JG-73 squadron is now an aggressor squadron for NATO. Aggressor squadrons are trained provide simulated threats for Navy and Air Force aircrews. They also provide a realistic threat so that NATO countries are better prepared for any future conflicts.

Capt. Swen Jacob, a German Air Force, pilot said that it is a great opportunity to train with the U.S. pilots. He feels proud to be helping prepare American pilots for future conflicts.

“It is a cool thing to do this type of training with the American fighter pilots,” said Jacob.

Mongillo says that the experiences gained from this exercise will be used on a limited level at NSAWC. NSAWC is where the Navy trains entire Carrier Air Wings before they go on a six-month deployment to an aircraft carrier. It is also the primary authority on Naval aviation training and tactics development.

When an instructor is briefing a class at NSAWC about the capabilities of the MiG-29. “He can actually talk about his personal interaction with the MiG and the pilots that flew it,” said Mongillo.

The month long exercise will not only benefit the Navy's Top Gun pilots and the Florida Air National Guard 125th Fighter Wing, but also many other Navy fleet and training squadrons. The Navy wants to expose as many aviators as possible to the real-world threats that they may go up against in future conflicts, stated Mongillo.

AGILE ARCHER 02 is the perfect opportunity for the Navy and the Air Force to sharpen the sword at the tip of the spear.

long class during normal working hours. Cobb also stresses the class takes up a lot of the student's personal time, and they must have the desire to learn about the EMT field.

According to Cobb, students in the basic EMT course are taught everything from introduction to medical care to the human body and how it works. They are also taught how to effectively care for their patients in the field.

“Along with the time students spend in the classroom, students also spend 24 hours riding with an ambulance service out in town,” said Cobb.

Once the students completed the course, they are certified Nevada state basic EMT, as well as nationally registered EMT basic.

Cobb gets satisfaction hearing from students that he taught come back and tell him of the difference that they made in someone's life.

Also, since the tragic events of September 11th, there has been a sense of heightened awareness of the very real possibilities of another major emergency event, says Cobb.

Cobb states that since 9/11, emergency response agencies nationwide, including Fallon, have been working closer together to improve communications between each other so that they can work together much more effectively.

Cobb stresses the importance of being a well-trained EMS technician. “You make the difference in someone's life right now. The decisions you make can be either life or death.”

CNO Calls Naval Aviation Critical in War on Terrorism

By Chief Journalist Walter T. Ham IV,
Chief of Naval Operations Public Affairs

SPARKS, Nev. — Two-thirds of the Navy's carrier force has deployed since the terrorist attacks of 9/11 and Naval aviation will continue to play a critical role in the War on Terrorism, Chief of Naval Operations Adm. Vern Clark said recently.

"What the world, and our leadership, is understanding is why the nation has to have this kind of capability," the CNO told Naval aviators at the Tailhook Reunion Banquet. "Without Naval aviation, we would be just like any other navy."

Clark said that Naval aviation has excelled because of its focus on the growth and development of its Sailors.

"We grow our perspective because of the people we get to work around, the people who teach us, the people we grow up with, the people who shape our character and our development," said Clark. "And even though I'm a black shoe (surface warfare officer), I'm an individual who has been shaped greatly by this community."

According to Clark, another reason for Naval aviation's success is clear focus on its purpose: to project American sovereignty and power to far corners of the Earth.

"It's the responsibility of everybody who leads in our Navy to help those who are coming along to understand who we are. One of the things that make naval aviation great is that you all understand who you are," Clark said. "The men and women who lead our Navy are thinking hard and challenging the assumptions about what our Navy is about today and what it needs to be about in the future. It's an exciting and great time to be a part of naval aviation and the United States Navy."

MYTHS & FACTS ABOUT RAPE

Rape and Sexual Assault are surrounded by so many myths that it is no wonder so many people have preconceived ideas about victims and perpetrators. Here are just a few myths/facts to help straighten out some misconceptions.

Myth: Rapists are usually strangers.
Fact: The vast majority of rapists know their victims.

Myth: A large percentage of reports of rape are false.
Fact: Statistics show that less than 5% of alleged rapes are unfounded.

Myth: Rape happens only to the young and attractive.
Fact: Everyone is potential victim.

Myth: Rape is not a big deal; it is only sex.
Fact: Rape IS a big deal. It is a crime using sex to express power, control, and/or anger. Sex is between two consenting partners; rape is an act of aggression using sex as a weapon. To be raped/sexually assaulted is to be violated and stripped of control and self-determination.

Myth: You are a rape victim only if you are hysterical and bruised.
Fact: The victim, male or female, may appear calm and collected, but may be suffering from rape trauma syndrome. Victims of date/acquaintance rape may not be bruised, cut, or beaten.

Myth: A person who has been raped is in some way to blame and needs to justify his or her behavior.
Fact: Rape is an act of violence, and should under NO circumstances be condoned because of the victim's behavior. Remember, if the victim at any time says NO and the assailant continues to pursue sex, the assailant is a rapist. No threat or violence need be used; IT IS STILL RAPE!

Myth: Rape can't happen to me. Fact: Rape is the fastest growing reported crime in America. ONE RAPE OCCURS EVERY 1.3 MINUTES. (Rape in America: A Report to the Nation)

Navy Traffic Safety Program Excerpt:

Use of Portable Headphones, Earphones, Cellphones, and Vehicle Audio Equipment.

Use of these devices masks or prevents recognition of emergency signals, alarms, announcements, the approach of vehicles, human speech, and the ability to determine the direction from which the sound is coming.

- Do not wear portable headphones, earphones or other listening devices while operating a motor vehicle or while jogging, walking, bicycling or skating on roads and streets on naval installations. Use of these devices on designated bicycle and running paths and sidewalks is permitted. These prohibitions do not include hearing aids, nor do they negate the requirement for wearing hearing protection where conditions dictate, or when communications-type equipment is being used for official Navy business
- Exercise caution when operating cellular telephones or global positioning systems in a moving motor vehicle. Whenever possible, use these devices only when the vehicle is safely stopped or have a passenger operate the equipment. Check local civil regulations concerning cellular telephone use in a moving vehicle off base.

Healthwatch: Leukemia and Lymphoma - Know the Symptoms

By Aveline V. Allen, Bureau of Medicine and Surgery

According to the Leukemia and Lymphoma Society, these two types of cancers are blood-related and originate in the bone marrow, for leukemia, or in lymphatic tissue, for lymphoma. The Society categorizes them as related cancers because they involve the uncontrolled growth of cells that function similarly.

The onset of these diseases interferes with the body's production of healthy blood cells and can make the body unable to protect itself against infections.

"Leukemias and lymphomas can affect any age group, including children and young adults," said Lt. Cmdr. Vincent Herrin, Medical Corps, an oncologist at National Naval Medical Center, Bethesda, Md.

According to the National Cancer Institute (NCI), some of the most common symptoms for leukemia are fever, chills, other flu-like symptoms, weakness and fatigue, frequent infections, and loss of appetite and weight.

The cause isn't known; however, it does occur more in males than females, and in whites more often than African-Americans.

Certain genetic conditions can increase the risk for leukemia. One such condition is Down's syndrome. "Chronic leukemia and low-grade lymphomas can be without symptoms or cause only very vague symptoms for a long period of time," said Herrin. "Acute leukemias and higher-grade lymphomas usually come about very quickly, and can cause a totally healthy person to become quite ill in a short amount of time."

The Lymphoma Information Network reports that symptoms for lymphoma may include a lack of energy, general fatigue, weight loss, night sweats, itching, and lower back pain.

As with any disease, prevention most always involves leading a healthy lifestyle, which includes a healthful diet. Medical research reports that a growing body of evidence supports the idea that eating healthier will help people avoid or delay the onset of illness.

Both NCI and The Lymphoma Information Network say treatment for both diseases may consist of chemotherapy, radiation therapy or bone marrow transplantation.

"I would encourage everyone interested in helping leukemia and lymphoma patients to sign up at a local bone marrow drive," said Herrin. He explained that registering involves a simple blood test, and the typing information goes into a national database.

"Your contribution could ultimately save the life of someone suffering from leukemia or lymphoma," said Herrin.

If you are interested in becoming a bone marrow donor see www.nmdp.org.
